No. 21—VOLCANIC LAVA

In some remote period Mt. Taylor, the San Francisco Peaks, and other mountains in the Southwest were volcanic and belched forth great masses of black lava and cinder which still remain in its hardened state as it was after cooling off ages ago.

Great areas, locally called Malpais (lava) may be seen from the highway near Tularosa and Carrizozo or as we pass Grants and the Ice Caves—also near Flagstaff, Arizona.
